

Feng Shui for your Love Life!

by David Kennedy

Ho-hum — another lovely Friday evening watching reality TV while all your wonderful friends are out having an incredible time in their real lives with their romantic partners. It's enough to drive one to . . . Feng Shui!

Are you currently enjoying the loving, mutually-respectful and satisfying relationship you long for?

Just a small percentage of people I know are currently in a happy, long-term relationship. Seems everybody else is waiting to hit the jackpot — they want to find their perfect partner or to move their presently unsatisfying relationship to a new level of love, respect, and intimate communication.

So what does it take? I suggest Feng Shui, which if applied properly, can truly work wonders.

Right at this moment, Feng Shui is one of the most powerful factors influencing your relationship. The energy of your home and bedroom may be keeping your ideal companion at bay, or it may be blocking the flow of energy between you and your current partner. Something as simple as correctly positioning your bed in relation to the bedroom door can be half of the battle. (Of course how you dress, talk, and smell has a wee influence as well . . . but that's another subject.)

Feng Shui principles and pointers that, if applied correctly, can truly spice up your love chi. Apply them with a sprig of intention, a dash of Reinforcement, and a dollop of visualization, and watch your love life blossom!

The master bedroom — the most critical room in the home — nourishes the chi of the adults. And the energy of the adults, in turn, feeds the children. If the chi of the adults suffers, so can the energy of the children. This situation makes the condition of the master bedroom important for the welfare of everyone in the home.

Many people heard that the chi of the master bedroom is an important Feng Shui factor. However a key element that is often overlooked is that the position of the bedroom itself within the floorplan is also quite important for Feng Shui of your romantic life (and your health).

If you have really good chi in the master bedroom: with great colors, wonderful bed placement, a super-charged Feng Shui-compliant bed, additional strong cures and more (Actually I virtually never encounter a master bedroom like this, but stay with me...) AND your bedroom is in a bad position within the floorplan of the home, you can still suffer ill Feng Shui effects! Yes, what was done inside the bedroom is helping, but where the bedroom IS, is simultaneously hurting.

The welfare of the entire household depends in large part on the placement, condition, and energy of the bedroom. Therefore, first consider the location of the bedroom in your floor plan.

The ideal placement of the master bedroom is in the Commanding Position of the home. This principle says that the best place for the bedroom is the back of the house and as far from the front door as possible.

The front half of the house is less favorable for the bedroom because this area is closer to the front door — the active energy of the street.

Choosing the back half of the house is more favorable; this area is generally quieter, more peaceful, and better protected.

Moreover, the best areas for the bedroom are in the Commanding Position areas of the house; these areas lie cater-cornered to the front door of the house.

For a front door on the left, the Commanding Position lies in the back right; for a front door on the right, the Commanding Position sits in the back left; and for a center door, choose either the back left or the back right of the house for your bedroom location.

If the master bedroom itself is in the front of the house, or in the basement, or threatened by a road or driveway, or has any of a host of other location problems, Feng Shui offers solutions to reduce the harm and enhance your health and marriage chi. How to remedy the energy if your bedroom is in the front of the house? One easy solution is to place a photo of you and your spouse in the back of the house in the “ideal location”, or where the bedroom would be placed if you could redesign the house.
